1. Before revision, it can be helpful to identify what type of learner you are. This will help you decide on the most appropriate methods to use for effective revision. You can find out what type of learner you are by taking this quiz: <https://bit.ly/2Ubz6rk>

Once you have discovered what type of learner you are, you can read more about how you process information and what revision tips will be useful here: <https://bit.ly/38uNxPG>

Types of learners...

- Visual
- Aural
- Verbal
- Physical
- Logical
- Social
- Solitary

Which one are you?

2. Before starting your revision, try to set out some goals at the end; what is it you want to achieve? For the day, as well as the long term goal. This gives you a target to work towards when revising.

3. Creating a revision timetable is a great way to structure the content you need to learn over a given period of time. They can range from covering a two week period to the whole year with important dates and exams noted down.

4. When making notes from any material, try to summarise the information in your own words as much as possible. Use simple words and shorthand to get the key information. This will help to build your understanding of the content. The best way to make brief, easy to read notes is using the Cornell method: <https://bit.ly/35hvCKh>

5.

If you are making notes online, there are a few useful applications for note taking such as google docs and OneNote. Information on more tools for online note making can be found here:

6.

A great way to effectively memorise notes and key facts is by using the spaced repetition technique, more information can be found here:

7.

Make sure to always plan time for breaks and rest. Overworking and doing repeated late nights will actually hinder your ability to recall information later on.

8.

It can be useful to make your revision notes after each lesson when it's fresh in your mind, rather than waiting until the holidays to start making notes. This gives you more time to focus on your weak points and do more exam questions.

9.

Make sure you have a balanced diet, have enough sleep and try to get some exercise or fresh air to reduce your stress and ensure you are always focussed when revising.

10.

Getting into the habit of reflecting on your performance at the end each week by looking at what went well or things that could be improved will ensure that you stay on track with your goals.
